

The future of nursing

It's a painful irony that the dedication of nurses and health-care professionals has led some to undervalue us and take us for granted. Now, devastating staff shortages have eroded the quality of patient care in this province. We've been fighting hard to prevent this situation, which was fully avoidable. It's discouraging that our voices have been ignored, but it hasn't stopped us, because no matter how tough things are, nurses and health-care professionals know we can always count on each other. We're standing together for our patients and our profession - and we won't back down.
